Dear Sirs:

Can you supply a copy of the Memorial Volume of Essays, published in honour of Professor Ridgeway?

Also, will you kindly quote on Cook's "Zeus", Vols. I and II, and on Farnell's Cults of the Greek States.

Have you a set of Roscher's Ausfuhrliches Lexikon der Griechischen und Romischen Mithologie, Leipzig, 1884?

Very truly yours,

Secretary

Dear Sirs:

Kindly send me the Memorial Volume of Essays in honor of Professor Ridgway, on which you quoted a price of 30/-.

Also kindly advise me as to the cost of binding the set of Roscher's Lexicon on which you quoted me Six Pounds, stating that the first three volumes were bound in half-calf neat, and the remainder in eight numbers sewed. What would be the cost of having the entire set bound to match the first three volumes? Would it be less expensive to have the first three volumes bound in a library buckram and the others bound to match?

Very truly yours,

Secretary

Your favour of January 10th at hand, and I have made an independent search to see if two copies of Gilmour's Lepers and Gentiles reached here.
Although our records state that one copy arrived, I find that both copies were received - the first copy having been returned to one of our members before it was entered in our books, consequently the mistake in our library department. We beg to apologize for this error, and I am enclosing our check to send you a check for the sum originally paid for the first copy received, namely £1.11.6, as we have sold the second copy to the borrower.

Dear Sir,

We have dispatched to you Ure's "Origin of Tyranny" ordered in your favour of the 25th.ult.

We regret that the second volume of Cook's "Zeus" has not yet been published, and we are unable to give any date for its publication. It is highly probable that some considerable time will elapse before it is ready.

Yours faithfully,

294 REICH (Emil) Atlas Antiquus. In Forty-eight Original, Graphic Maps, with Elaborate Text to each map, and full index. Cr 4to, cloth (pub 12s 6d net) Macmillan, 1908 0 4 6 Post. 9d

In the "Atlas Antiquus" the great historical events and many an institution of ancient history, including Oriental as well as Graeco-Roman times, are represented. The student is enabled to form a graphic and plastic view of events that otherwise will always lack form and distinctness. Military moves are represented by coloured lines and arrows directly suggesting movement. Colonisation, the chief power of expansion with the Hellenes, and also with the Romans, is made clearer. The text taken from the original sources gives a full explanation of each map.

Gentlemen:

I have your bill of August 8th for Macdonald's "The Evolution of Coinage", 2/9. In my letter ordering this, I requested you to send a second copy to Professor E. Pridik, Russian Numismatic Collection, The Hermitage, Leningrad, Russia, and I thought that I had made it clear without any misunderstanding that I wished to have the bill come here for this copy. I trust it has not been sent to Professor Pridik.

Kindly advise if you are able to quote on a copy of Shaw's "History of Currency", London, 1895.

Has Professor A. B. Cook's second volume of Zeus yet appeared? In this connection, through some ~~oversight~~our part, we received two copies of of Vol. I. May I ask what you would be able to

GRAECIA ANTIQUA

MAPS AND PLANS

TO ILLUSTRATE

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE

COMPILED BY

SIR JAMES GEORGE FRAZER

O.M., F.R.S., F.B.A.

FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE
MEMBRE DE L'INSTITUT DE FRANCE

WITH EXPLANATORY TEXT BY

A. W. VAN BUREN

PROFESSOR OF ARCHAEOLOGY IN THE AMERICAN ACADEMY IN ROME

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO., LTD.

PREFACE

THE merits of Sir James Frazer's edition (1898) of Pausanias have been familiar to a generation of scholars pursuing the study of the topography and monuments of Greece either on the spot or in libraries. They require no emphasis here: the work has itself become a classic. A special feature and a notable embellishment of those volumes consisted in the series of maps and plans, both coloured plates and text illustrations, in which the scholarship and judgement of the editor were interpreted by means of some of the best craftsmanship that was available. This material has served its purpose well; and it is capable of further and more general usefulness. When Sir James expressed his desire that it should be reissued separately, accompanied by the modicum of text required to bring its meaning into relief, as a portable atlas for travellers following literally or in spirit in the footsteps of Pausanias, and when he added that the present nature of his own scholarly undertakings precluded the possibility of his preparing such a text himself, it appeared to me to be the duty of one who for years past had benefited by the guidance and inspiration of the Pausanias to offer to this new project such collaboration as might lie within my powers—a slight return for the services which the Pausanias has rendered to scholarship. The preparation of one condensed page of text to face each plate, though demanding, on practical grounds, the exclusion of much matter which would have had interest, has proved less a tax on the compiler's ingenuity than a delightful privilege; it has been rendered easy, and the result has been assured of greater effectiveness, by Sir James's consent that the apposite passages in his own commentary should be incorporated in the new text. Economy of space has dictated terseness and at times uncomely abbreviation; but it is hoped that, even in this form, something of the feeling for topographical significance and something of the reverence for the works of the men of olden days which pervades the original commentary may have found its way into the present volume.

The plates, and a selection of the text-illustrations, are reissued without change, except that we are indebted to the Director of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens for permission to reproduce Plan No. XXVI, Corinth; to the Director of the Österreichisches Archäologisches Institut of Vienna for Plan No. XLII, 2, Market-Place at Elis; and to M. E. de Boccard for permission to reproduce Plan No. LVI, Delphi, Athena Pronaia, from Fouilles de Delphes, Tome II; while Plan No. XXXV, Sparta, has been adapted so as to include the results of excavations conducted by the British School at Athens, through the kind cooperation of Mr. A. M. Woodward, former Director of that institution.

When necessary, attention is called to the points in which the plans require revision in the light of the thirty and more years that have elapsed since their preparation; such changes are occasioned chiefly by the evidence yielded through fresh excavations, and where there have been no extensive developments of this sort, the record set forth so long ago still retains practically its full value, save indeed as the economic forces of our own time have left their mark on the landscape, especially in improved means of communication.

The few references to recent publications which have been introduced may be acceptable to scholars, partly as justification for the views expressed in the text, and partly as guides to the voluminous literature of the past thirty years.

A. W. VAN BUREN.

ANCIENT ATHENS

Our author's account of Athens itself pursues on the whole a topographical order, at least if we are to accept Dr. W. Dörpfeld's views as to the Enneacrunus passage; for the rest of Attica Pausanias follows several categories, namely demes, mountains, and islands, until with his description of the Sacred Way which led from Athens to Eleusis he once and for all grasps firmly the topographical thread. He enters Athens at the N.-W. corner, by the Piraeus highway and the Dipylon Gate; he comes to the Market-place and its neighbourhood, and eventually passes to E. and S. of the Acropolis, which he ascends from the W. end; he leaves it by the same gateway, proceeds northwards, and finally passes out of the city walls at the same point by which he had entered; then he sees the great burial-ground of the Athenian state, lying to the E. of the private graveyard which had attracted his attention as he was approaching from Piraeus (No. XIII).

The plan shows the city walls of the classical period, with their extension to the E. under Hadrian, to include a villa suburb; also the fortifications of the Acropolis, which were restored in the fifth century B.C. after the departure of the Persians; of the prehistoric walls of the hill considerable stretches are still to be seen. The "wheel-shaped" city of the oracle quoted by Herodotus (vii. 140) was an intermediate phase; Thucydides (ii. 15. 3) says that the city which preceded it lay on the Acropolis and extended in a southerly direction from the citadel.

The striking features of the Athenian landscape are due to geological conditions: a stratum of hard limestone rested upon softer layers of marl, clay, and schist; with the progress of erosion, only isolated bits of the limestone, in heights increasing from S.-W. to N.-E., have been left resting upon the lower strata; thus were formed the hills of Piraeus; the group consisting of the Hill of the Nymphs, the Pnyx, and the Hill of the Muses; the Areopagus; the Acropolis; Lycabettus; and Anchesmus. The genius of Plato had arrived at a conclusion essentially the same as that of modern science, though couched in other language; he says (Critias, 112 A): "the condition of the Acropolis was different then from now. For one exceedingly rainy night dissolved it and made it bare, earthquakes too participating in this, and a mighty rain, the third before Deucalion's destruction; but formerly, in other times, it extended as far as the Eridanus and the Ilissus and embraced within them the Pnyx and included Mount Lycabettus which is opposite to the Pnyx, and it was entirely covered with soil and with few exceptions had a level surface."

In antiquity as now, the supply of water at Athens was scanty except in time of freshet, and was precious in the eyes of the people. Two of the streams, Eridanus to N. of the Acropolis and Ilissus to S., appear on the plan; their fellow, Cephisus, flows in the lowest part of the plain to the N. (see No. XX). Several springs made their way out from the lower parts of the limestone cap of the Acropolis and the Pnyx; and in some regions of the city there were many wells.

The clay of the Cephisus valley and the marbles of the mountains served as material for Athenian potters, sculptors, and architects; and the olive groves provided the prizes for the winners at the festival games.

The bracing but often boisterous winds, and the limpid clarity of the atmosphere, have always been famous.

Athens and Attica, though occupied by various communities and princes in the Bronze Age, were not in a position to assume a prominent part in Greek affairs until the union of the various sections of the district in the first half of the seventh century B.C.; and it was not until the enlightened tyranny of Pisistratus at the middle of the sixth century that the name of Athens became synonymous with the choicest Greek culture. Apart from the cultivation of the olive and the exploitation of the silver mines of Laurium, the chief wealth was derived from overseas colonies and commerce. The pre-eminence of Athens in art and letters was largely due to her readiness to accept with hospitality the talents that were attracted thither from other parts: if not politically, at least spiritually, she became the capital of the Greek world.

Dear Sir,

We are revising the activities of our Catalogue Despatch Department, in order that we may the more efficiently bring our Catalogues before the notice of those who should be interested in the Books we have to sell.

To this end we should be very grateful if you would tell us exactly how many copies of our Catalogues should be sent to your Library, and how they should be addressed?

In the past it has been our custom to address one Catalogue to the Librarian: but it has been pointed out that a large Library has many Departments, and our concern is to know exactly what is the best method of reaching those Departments.

Your cooperation will be greatly esteemed.

Yours faithfully,

P.S. It occurs to us that you might like to have lists of new English publications. If you wish to have them will you kindly say so.

Gentlemen:

I am taking the liberty of returning to you, under separate cover, the copy of Shrine and Ross's, Heart of Asia, which you recently sent us at our request. On its arrival we found that a copy had previously been obtained and we are therefore unable to use this one. If you are unable to return it to the source from which you obtained it, will you please dispose of it and charge us for any loss that may evolve in the transaction, including also the eight pence postage which is mentioned in your bill which I am herewith returning. Regretting the necessity of putting you to this inconvenience, I am

Gentlemen:

Responding to your circular regarding catalogues I believe that a single copy addressed to the Library of this institution would suffice. I am not sure whether or not you have been accustomed to sending a copy to our Curator, Mr. Howland Wood. It might be desirable to continue doing this.

Very truly yours,

Gentlemen:

Referring to your catalogue No. 393, item No. 2019 "Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae" we are very much interested in this and would appreciate your giving us a more detailed description of the binding and its condition and also advise what prospect there is of being able to secure the single volume which is missing.

If you are willing to consider the proposition outlined below will you be so good as to hold the set until we have received your reply. Our income for purchases is fairly regular but it is not the same for each month. If you would be willing to permit us to distribute the payments for this set over a period of not more than six months we should probably be able to pay at least £ 20. on receipt of the set and we should probably be able to pay the balance well before the six months limit indicated. Should you care to cable us "proposition accepted" I can send you an order on the first steamer following receipt of your word.

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your offer of the Journal of Roman Studies Vol. 1 to 5 in parts, for £ 2.10. We need to complete our set Vols. 1 and 7 and I should prefer to have you wait until you could supply these two additional volumes. Could you let me know what prospect there is of your being able to do this.

Very truly yours,

Gentlemen:

Referring to our letter of yesterday regarding "Germany and German Literature by Continue", please be advised if you accept the suggestion made that we desire to have them sent by book post and not as a single consignment in a freight package. We should, of course, pay the postage.

YOUR REF. ..... OUR REF. Dept.B.H.S/CJS October 26th.1932

The Secretary,
The American Numismatic Society,
Broadway between 155th
and 156th.Streets,
New York.

Dear Sir,

We are in receipt of your letter of October 17th. and 18th., with reference to item No.2019 of our catalogue 393, "Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae", 36 vols. £75.

We are quite willing to agree to your proposition with regard to payment, that is to say, that payment shall be completed in a period of not more then six months, and we have cabled to you "Proposition accepted", as you suggest.

With regard to the binding of the set, it appears to have been originally a prize awarded to some member of Trinity College, Cambridge, as 27 of the volumes are stamped on the back and sides with the College Arms. These volumes, bound in full calf are all in excellent condition, apart from a few insignificant scratches, all hinges being quite sound. The nine newly bound volumes in half calf have been bound as nearly as possible uniform with the original binding. These nine volumes are practically as fresh as when they left the binders hands.

Continuation Sheet No. 1

From W. HEFFER & SONS LTD., CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND

With regard to the missing Volume II of the Annuaire Germanica, this appears to be very scarce. We have been trying for some time past to find a copy in paper covers that we could bind uniformly with the rest, but up to now we have only succeeded in finding a large paper copy already bound. We shall continue to search, and we think that in course of time a copy will probably turn up.

We note that you wish the volumes to be sent by book post, and shall be glad to dispatch them immediately on receipt of your official order. In the meantime we are reserving the set for you.

We note that you require Volumes I & VII of the Journal of Roman Studies. We have not yet been able to hear of Vol.VII, but will continue our searches, and inform you as soon as we are successful. We think it should be possible to find both volumes although they appear to be rather scarce.

Yours faithfully,

Gentlemen:

Your cablegram received. I enclose an order for the set to which it refers, as per our letter of October 18th please have the volumes securely wrapped and mailed by book post and not in a single package. To get a large parcel through the Customs is not only expensive but very inconvenient.

Gentlemen:

Yours of October 26th is at hand and we have previously sent you a confirmation order. I am very glad, however, to have the description of the set and to know that you will continue to find the mentioned volume.

With regard to the Journal of Roman Studies, please note that we want Volumes I to VII inclusive and not Volumes I and VII only, as your letter seems to indicate. I hope you can obtain these for us.
